The Headmaster,
Nyamanga Secondary School,
P.O. Box 52,

Through: The Head of the English Department

Dear Sir/Madam,
RE: REQUEST FOR PERMISSION TO PARTICIPATE IN A DEBATE
I am writing as the chairperson of our English Club to request permission for club members to participate in a debate organised by the English Club of Kaganga Secondary School. We have received an invitation to take part.

The debate would help members practise spoken English, prepare reasoned arguments and learn to respond respectfully to opposing views. It would also encourage cooperation with learners from another school.

If permission is granted, we will work with the English Department to confirm the date, transport and supervision arrangements. We will follow the school's requirements and ensure that our participation is properly organised.

I would be grateful for your approval. Thank you for considering our request.

Yours faithfully,

Nuru Eli

Chairperson, English Club

Study Tip: The writing date is a model detail; the examination does not supply the debate date.

10(a)(i). Analyse cultural change or alienation as a theme in the supplied poem.

Step 1: Name the theme, cite the relevant image and explain what it reveals.

Step 2: Connect the contrasted foods with the larger image of Africa and its child. Explain a cultural interpretation instead of asserting that a particular food necessarily causes death.

Final Answer: The change from breast and wild honey to powdered milk and sugar symbolises a replacement of familiar cultural nourishment. The speaker criticises uncritical imitation that leaves the child disconnected from inherited values.

Study Tip: This poem uses provocative feeding imagery for a cultural and moral argument. Its imagery is not clinical evidence or advice about infant feeding.

10(a)(ii). Analyse parental or communal responsibility.

Step 1: Name the theme, cite the relevant image and explain what it reveals.

Step 2: Use the contrast between mourning now and decisions made earlier. Interpret the severe accusation as the poem's criticism of harmful guidance.

Final Answer: The speaker reminds the woman that she made choices shaping the child's life. The refusal of the breast and the accusation of a committed "murder" make the mother's responsibility central, rather than allowing her to blame the child alone.

Study Tip: This poem uses provocative feeding imagery for a cultural and moral argument. Its imagery is not clinical evidence or advice about infant feeding.

10(a)(iii). Analyse disappointment and regret.

Step 1: Name the theme, cite the relevant image and explain what it reveals.

Step 2: Compare the woman's former satisfaction with the later lament; explain the reversal from pride to loss.

Final Answer: The opening presents crying and lamentation over a child considered lost. The ending insists that the mother must suffer with him, showing grief after choices whose consequences cannot simply be wished away.

Study Tip: This poem uses provocative feeding imagery for a cultural and moral argument. Its imagery is not clinical evidence or advice about infant feeding.

10(b)(i). Identify symbolism and explain its purpose.

Step 1: Identify the device and give evidence from the supplied poem.

Step 2: Explain what the two figures stand for and how the symbolic reading broadens the poem's message.

Final Answer: The woman of Africa can symbolise African society, and the child a generation shaped by that society. This makes the personal loss an image of a wider cultural problem.

10(b)(ii). Identify metaphor and explain its purpose.

Step 1: Identify the device and give evidence from the supplied poem.

Step 2: Identify the direct comparison without like or as and connect its disappearance with the sense of loss.

Final Answer: “The fire of life” presents vitality as fire; its absence conveys the child’s loss of energy and belonging. The metaphor makes an abstract decline visible.

10(b)(iii). Identify repetition and explain its purpose.

Step 1: Identify the device and give evidence from the supplied poem.

Step 2: Select repeated words actually appearing in the poem and explain their emphasis rather than calling them a fixed refrain.

Final Answer: The recurring address “woman” and repeated “That” at the beginning of lines focus blame and accumulate the speaker’s accusations. Repetition intensifies the appeal to reflect on responsibility.

11. Choose one character from each of two novels and explain three ways each educates African society.

Step 1: Choose Adyeri and Oyah and organise three distinct educational roles for each.

Step 2: Explain leadership accountability, family responsibility and continuing discipline through Adyeri; explain advocacy, care and women's professional ability through Oyah.

Step 3: Connect actions with lessons for society, rather than merely listing personality adjectives.

Final Answer: Model response:

Characters educate readers through admirable actions and cautionary examples. Adyeri in Passed Like a Shadow by B. M. Mapalala and Oyah in Unanswered Cries by Osman Conteh offer lessons about responsibility and dignity.

Adyeri's role as a headmaster raises the issue of public trust. His misuse of school resources for private purposes and the loss of his position warn readers that authority must serve the institution rather than personal interests. His conduct as a father and husband also shows how irresponsible choices damage a household. Family members need dependable care and honest relationships, not merely the status of having a parent in an important job. Finally, the contrast between his professional opportunity and later decline teaches that achievement needs continuing discipline. A position gained through ability can be lost when a person stops acting responsibly. Oyah's legal work on Olabisi's behalf shows the value of using knowledge to defend a vulnerable person. Readers learn that harmful demands should be challenged through reason and effective advocacy. Her treatment of Olabisi also teaches compassion: helping the girl as a person matters alongside arguing her case. Such care counters the tendency to treat an individual as merely the object of a dispute. A third lesson comes from Oyah's competence as a woman professional. Her contribution challenges the assumption that serious public responsibilities belong only to men. Society benefits when people's abilities are recognised without gender prejudice.

The two characters therefore teach complementary lessons. Adyeri warns against failures of trust and discipline, while Oyah demonstrates advocacy, compassion and professional competence. Their examples encourage accountable leadership and respect for human dignity.

12. Show how life's challenges cause disappointment in families and society, with three points from each of two plays.

Step 1: Introduce the two plays and connect three distinct challenges in each with a particular frustrated expectation.

Step 2: For Three Suitors use restricted marital choice, failed financial expectations and reliance on Sangatiti. For This Time Tomorrow use poverty, threatened housing and unsuccessful resistance.

Step 3: Explain the link from challenge to disappointment rather than simply retelling the plots.

Final Answer: Model response:

Disappointment arises when hopes meet obstacles. Three Suitors: One Husband by Guillaume Oyono Mbia and This Time Tomorrow by Ngugi wa Thiong'o show how social pressures frustrate people's plans.

In Three Suitors: One Husband, Juliette's wish to choose her partner meets her family's interest in bride wealth. This disappoints her because marriage is treated as a financial arrangement rather than her personal decision. The competing suitors also face disappointment when their payments do not secure the marriage they expect. The competition exposes the danger of treating consent as something money can purchase. A third challenge comes when the missing bride-wealth money creates accusations and dependence on Sangatiti's supposed powers. His failure to solve the problem leaves the family without the certainty they wanted. The episode challenges the expectation that superstition can replace evidence and honest problem-solving.

In This Time Tomorrow, poverty leaves Njango with a fragile livelihood and little security. Her hard work does not guarantee a stable future, so the gap between effort and opportunity becomes a source of frustration. The threatened demolition of the settlement then destroys the residents' hope of remaining in their homes. Njango's uncertainty about where she will be the next day captures this disappointment directly. Finally, the Stranger's attempt to organise resistance does not bring the protection people seek. The power used against the residents shows why hope based on collective protest can be frustrated when authorities refuse to address their needs.

The plays connect disappointment to greed, insecurity and unequal power. They suggest that lasting improvement requires respect for consent, reliable knowledge and fair treatment of vulnerable people.

Section Summary: Use the required Through line in the formal letter. Poem analysis needs evidence plus interpretation, and character essays must explain lessons rather than only describe traits.
