Step 1: Turn the poem's experience into a general lesson supported by its wording.

Step 2: The plan to involve the brothers supports shared responsibility.

Final Answer: Family members should work together to help a parent overcome hardship.

10. Show how conflict harms people physically or mentally, with three points from each of two plays.

Step 1: Choose the two plays and identify three distinct consequences in each.

Step 2: For every point, link the conflict to a named character's distress, insecurity or impaired judgement.

Step 3: The question allows mental harm; do not invent physical injuries that the plays do not establish.

Final Answer: Model response:

Conflict can damage people's security, judgement and emotional wellbeing.

Three Suitors: One Husband by Guillaume Oyono Mbia and This Time Tomorrow by Ngugi wa Thiong'o illustrate different pressures on individuals.

In Three Suitors: One Husband, Juliette's conflict with her elders over a husband causes distress because her preference for Oko is denied. Being treated as a source of bride wealth makes her struggle to secure control of her future. The rivalry surrounding Ndi and Mbia also turns marriage into a competition over payments and prestige. Those who have paid face anger and disappointment when their expected agreement fails, showing how a commercial approach to marriage damages relationships. A third consequence concerns Atangana and the missing money. His anxiety produces dependence on Sangatiti's supposed powers rather than sound judgement. Financial conflict therefore encourages further manipulation and emotional confusion. In This Time Tomorrow, the authorities' demolition plan places Njango under severe mental pressure. Her small business and shelter represent survival, so the threatened loss creates fear of destitution. Wanjiuru also suffers uncertainty about her future: conflict between the poor residents' needs and official plans denies her a secure place from which to pursue a better life. Finally, the Stranger's call for collective resistance raises hope, but the residents' difficulty in sustaining unity leaves that hope disappointed. Their inability to protect the settlement exposes how powerlessness intensifies anxiety and frustration.

Both plays show that destructive conflict is more than an argument. It pressures personal choice, disrupts livelihoods and weakens clear judgement. Respectful negotiation and attention to the needs of vulnerable people would address the sources of these harms.

11. Show that betrayal breaks an agreement or trust, giving three points from each of two novels.

Step 1: Identify the prior promise or expectation before describing the act that violates it.

Step 2: Use three supported examples in each novel and explain the harm to the person who relied on the relationship.

Step 3: Distinguish explicit agreements from implicit duties; avoid inventing dialogue in which a promise was supposedly made.

Final Answer: Model response:

Betrayal requires a relationship carrying an expectation of loyalty, honesty or care. Such an agreement may be explicit, as in marriage, or implicit in a trusted relationship. Passed Like a Shadow by B. M. Mapalala and Unanswered Cries by Osman Conteh demonstrate its breach.

In Passed Like a Shadow, Adyeri's relationship with Birungi violates the faithfulness expected in his marriage to Amoti. The breach hurts the household and reveals that marital loyalty carries obligations. Birungi herself abandons Adyeri when he becomes ill after benefiting from his support. Her refusal to shelter him contradicts the expectation of mutual care in their partnership. John's treatment of Abooki offers a third example. After gaining her trust, he drugs her drink and assaults her. This is a grave violation of the safety expected in friendship, rather than merely a disagreement between people.

In Unanswered Cries, Ade Jones' relationships with other women betray Makalay's expectation of fidelity in marriage. An existing partnership is the basis of the disloyalty. Eddy's contrary testimony in court betrays Olabisi because it breaks the understanding on which she expected his support. His change of position exposes the difference between an honest disagreement and a reversal after trust has been established. Makalay's attempt to force cutting on Olabisi can also be understood as a breach of parental trust. A mother is expected to safeguard her daughter, yet pressure to conform overrides the girl's wishes and bodily security. This third agreement is an implicit duty of care, not a quoted formal promise.

The novels consequently show that betrayal depends on a prior obligation. Marriage, partnership, friendship and parental care make conduct morally significant because people rely on the loyalty and protection they imply.

Section Summary: A theme is an issue developed in a poem; a message is a lesson inferred from it. Essays need named events and a clear link to conflict or betrayal.
